Dear Tokyo Coding Club Hiring Team,

Having glanced at my resume, you may be wondering why an award-winning game developer is applying for a job at Tokyo Coding Club. The answer lies in my deep passion for education and teaching. More importantly, I am eager to use my multitudinous years of leadership and mentoring experience in a meaningful way. As such, I am eager to contribute to your institution's commitment to fostering meaningful experiences that develop their tech and life skills among students. Additionally, my experience living in Japan for half a year has made me well prepared for the transition abroad.

I hold a Bachelor's degree is in Software Engineering and Creative Design, which on the surface would seem unrelated to any teaching position. Per contra, I have a wealth of applicable experience, from my time spent in leadership and mentorship roles. For two years, I served the Vice President of my university's Video Game Development Club, providing feedback, mentoring, putting together workshops, getting guest speakers, and making the club a welcoming environment for both experienced and inexperienced members alike. I was a Teaching Assistant in both high-school and university and have helped students grasp complex topics on VR/XR technologies as well as music education. Furthermore, I have extensive experience working with children, having spent five years working at a summer camp, three of which I was the camps' Boating Director. These roles have strengthened my ability to manage groups, create engaging activities, and foster a positive learning environment.

I am enthusiastic about the opportunity to bring my expertise and dedication to Tokyo Coding Club. I welcome the chance to discuss how my skills and experience align with your needs. Thank you for your time and consideration—I look forward to the possibility of joining your team.

Sincerely,

Michael Boschwitz
